Pretty! I love how you got that cloud to echo the line of the mountain. Hope your trip's going well!

I can see Mt Jefferson and the Three Sisters off on the horizon as I go about my days here in the Willamette Valley. I find it soothing.

Mainly because they are sleeping, of course. If they woke up it would become rather more interesting here in a not good way.

The last time Mt Hood burped I was at the gym and looked up to see it on the bank of televisions.

Workout partner and me: Ooooooh, coolness.

Everyone else: What? What? is that good or bad? What?

If you make it up as far as Seattle, I hope you'll let me take you (and your traveling companion) out to dinner.

Ooops. I appear to have passed north of you before receiving this transmission. Perhaps next time!

Ah, well. On the other hand, by the next time you come through, I may well have my own restaurant to feed you at.

When you reach Mt Hood, be sure to stop to watch the kiteboarders in the Columbia.

admires the view

I like the scale of the cloud shadows.

I'm glad that one is asleep.

realizes the trailer at the left of the photo is the same carrier I often see when I go through our industrial park - hmm, interesting

Have fun!

...better than a large volcano between friends?

Niiiiice.

Haven't been out that way since I got out of the Navy. Somewhere around here I've got a picture of my car (still with Hawaiian plates) parked next to a ginormous snowbank at Crater Lake. One way to beat the heat!
